My Dear Pal, Ralph,

I wish you were here now. The radio is playing the most beautiful music, and that sort of thing is always so much more precious when shared.

I am looking forward to your visiting here, and as I want to plan a little entertainment for your dear self, would be pleased to hear from you as to the exact date that you expect to be here.

The lovely music is inspiring me to become poetic and sentimental, but am doing my best to curb those instincts, and so I shall now become very matter of fact, and practical, and shall take this opportunity of inviting you to supper at my home on the first day that your dear self arrives here. I also want you to visit my home on a Friday night (my night out) when I will have a few people over whom I feel sure you will like to meet, and who are sure to just love dear you. I am looking forward to seeing quite a lot of you, so please don't plan distant fishing trips, or all-day golf matches, because I wouldn't be able to tag along.

Becky tells me that Hersogs are planning a party for you, and that I am going to be invited. Thrills and heart-beats!

I really should have started this letter by thanking you for your kindness to me, instead of getting all keyed up about your forthcoming visit. I did enjoy my brief visit, and look forward to coming again and again, and thank you very much for taking me around.

Please convey my friendliest greetings to your mother and dad, and to the other nice people to whom you introduced me.

Affectionately yours,

Anna

P.S. Please write soon, telling me date of your arrival here.
