

Montreal, March 11th, 1921.

Dear Saint Saucy:-

The photograph you will receive by this mail is not the one originally intended for you. I have another being framed and have sent this one to satisfy your hunger in the meantime. Keep it at home for night use; the framed one is for your desk at the office. Miss Haigh, my side kick, thinks you ought to frame the other as well, for if you do not, she says, you will have me looking like a coon in no time. Now, Saucy, surely you will not be so rough on me! She says she only hopes you don't chew tobacco. Don't she mean?

Tell me, sweetheart, how long do you think it possible for joy such as is in my heart, to last? Can it be retained for one whole year?
 I am so happy sometimes that it hurts. I have been trying to analyze my feelings - trying to come down to earth, to tell myself that this sweet, tender attachment is a living fact, that some day I shall surrender myself completely to you and you to me, but it seems too sacred, too good to be true. Nothing is ever perfect, and yet my happiness seems so, perfect in the sense that I feel confident that the future holds the fulfilment of all my wildest dreams. I think perhaps I feel this way because I have kept my heart barred against all invaders. I never thought I could care for anyone as I do for you. You seem to be drawing me toward you. I am overwhelmed. I thought it was only in books that man and woman could be so taken up with each other. Oh! what matters it what I thought? The facts are before us, and perhaps if we are deserving, our joy will outlast a year, perhaps it will live forever. I know my inconsistency makes me appear ridiculous before you, but you wish to know the truth, and I can't be more frank, can I?

God bless you and watch over you, my Wonder Man, is the selfish prayer of your affinity, for without you, life would be too empty to continue living.

all yours,
 Rosana.
